A study by Esposito, Lee, Edwards estimated that 1 in 2,000 men and 1 in 33,000 women have a lifetime risk of dying as a result of police use of deadly force, with the highest risk for black men, at approximately 1 in 1,000. Black, Hispanic, and Native American/Alaskan individuals are disproportionately killed in police shootings compared to White or Asian individuals

In Tennessee v. Garner (1985), the Supreme Court held that it is not better that all felony suspects die than that they escape," and thus the police use of deadly force against unarmed and non-dangerous suspects is in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Following this decision, police departments across the United States adopted stricter policies regarding the use of deadly force, as well as providing de-escalation training to their officers.

A neigbhor who saw what happened told local MPR news: "She was trying to turn around, and the ICE agent was in front of her car, and he pulled out a gun and put it right in — like, his midriff was on her bumper — and he reached across the hood of the car and shot her in the face like three, four times,”

A Department of Homeland Security (DHS) spokesperson said that Good had "committed an act of domestic terrorism"

The shooting has been defended by President Donald Trump and federal officials, who have said that the shooting was in self defense. Democratic lawmakers have called for a criminal investigation, with protests against the shooting in Minneapolis and other U.S. cities. Minneapolis mayor Jacob Frey and Minnesota governor Tim Walz have called on the federal government to end their presence in the city.

Hundreds of civilians protested in Minneapolis, and more protested in Chicago, New York, and the District of Columbia. Minneapolis Public Schools cancelled classes after the shooting, and after ICE deployed chemical irritants against students at Roosevelt High School.

The shooting took place on Portland Avenue between East 33rd and 34th Streets in the Central neighborhood of Minneapolis. According to witnesses, there were a total of four ICE agents in two vehicles that approached on foot and surrounded a red Honda Pilot that was blocking the road. Videos of the incident showed two agents approach the car, which was stopped sideways in the middle of the road. The driver repeatedly waved for ICE vehicles to pass by her, when two agents exited their vehicle and ordered her to exit her car. Eyewitnesses and videos show that ICE agents were giving conflicting orders to the driver.

One agent told the driver to drive away from the scene, while another yelled for the driver to get out of the car. Based on three recordings of the incident shared online, two agents walked to Good's car. Someone was heard on video recordings saying "get out of the fucking car". One agent attempted to open the door of the car and reach through the window. As another agent held the side door, the driver reversed briefly and then moved forward while turning the steering wheel, apparently to maneuver away from the two agents and exit the area.

WANTED

The car then began to drive forward, and was steering away from the agent in front, who fired three shots into the car. It is unclear from the video if the car made contact with the third agent, who had stayed on his feet throughout the incident. disputed  The car carried on and crashed into a parked car and light pole several feet down the street. ICE agents also prevented a bystander who identified themselves as a physician from providing medical aid to the driver. No medical aid was provided for about 15 minutes and when medical first responders arrived. One witness also reported seeing the shooter walk away from the scene and get in an ICE vehicle. DHS secretary Kristi Noem stated the ICE agent who fired the shots was treated at a hospital and later released.

DHS spokesperson Tricia McLaughlin said that an ICE officer "fearing for his life" had shot the woman in self-defense after she attempted to run them over in what McLaughlin described as "an act of domestic terrorism". DHS reported that several officers were injured, but were expected to recover. A report published by The Guardian the same day said there were "no visible sign in the videos" of injuries to ICE officers in the incident.

United States president Donald Trump described Good as "very disorderly, obstructing and resisting, who then violently, willfully, and viciously ran over the ICE Officer, who seems to have shot her in self defense." He went on to say that he found it "hard to believe [the agent] is alive, but is now recovering in the hospital". DHS secretary Kristi Noem said Good "attacked them and those surrounding them and attempted to run them over and ram them with her vehicle. House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries demanded a criminal investigation, with other Democrats in the U.S. legislature, such as Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, also calling for investigations

Speaking at a press conference on the afternoon of the killing, Minnesota governor Tim Walz called it "the consequences of governance designed to generate fear, headlines and conflict" and added "we do not need any further help from the federal government". In response to DHS statements that the driver was "weaponizing" her car to run over an ICE agent, Minneapolis mayor Jacob Frey noted that the video footage of the incident did not appear to suggest this, stating "Having seen the video myself, I want to tell everybody directly that is bullshit" and "To ICE, get the fuck out of Minneapolis".

WANTED

The killing drew a crowd of hundreds of protestors to the location. By the evening, that crowd grew to thousands, including multiple Minneapolis City Council members. Governor Walz announced he had begun preparing the Minnesota National Guard. Law enforcement fired tear gas and pepper spray in Minneapolis, and protestors threw snowballs.

Legal analyst Ian Millhiser found it unlikely that the federal government would charge the shooter with a crime, but said it may be possible for state prosecutors to lay homicide charges against him. The previous year, the Supreme Court ruled in Martin v. United States that federal officers are protected from prosecution only to the extent that they acted in a "necessary and proper" fashion in the discharge of their official duties.

The annual average number of justifiable homicides alone was previously estimated to be near 400. Updated estimates from the Bureau of Justice Statistics released in 2015 estimate the number to be around 930 per year, or 1,240 if assuming that non-reporting local agencies kill people at the same rate as reporting agencies.

Police brutality in the United States

Police brutality is the use of excessive or unwarranted force by law enforcement, resulting in physical or psychological harm to a person. It includes beatings, killing, intimidation tactics, racist abuse, and/or torture.
In the 2000s, the federal government attempted tracking the number of people killed in interactions with US police, but the program was defunded. In 2006, a law was passed to require reporting of homicides at the hands of the police, but many police departments do not obey it. Some journalists and activists have provided estimates, limited to the data available to them. In 2019, 1,004 people were shot and killed by police according to The Washington Post, whereas the Mapping Police Violence project counted 1,098 killed.

A 2016 working paper in the National Bureau of Economic Research by economist Roland G. Fryer, Jr. found that while overall "blacks are 21 percent more likely than whites to be involved in an interaction with police in which at least a weapon is drawn" and that in the raw data from New York City's Stop and Frisk program "blacks and Hispanics are more than fifty percent more likely to have an interaction with police which involves any use of force. A 2020 study in the American Political Science Review found that administrative police records were statistically biased and underestimated the extent of racial bias in policing. A 2020 study found "strong and statistically reliable evidence of anti-Black racial disparities in the killing of unarmed Americans by police in 2015–2016,
